Southern als, the two Carolinas, Georgia, and or two-thirds of Mississippi, in one; with Texas alone as she was before lexican war, over west. Not a very concern, but too big yet for a slave tre.

Now, suppose us agreed to these boundand how do they suit the Confederacy? If the Trans pledge its hero, Jeff Davis, o them? Does the "Northern American sutteman" think they would go down? is there any man, or thing in the shape of man, with a solid wooden head, who find agrees that the Bouth would. think of accepting independence with soop a territory? No, the Confederates would sooner fall altogether. Independence in such limits would be a curse prolonged.

Boundaries, see peace with boundaries, are just the ugly things to handle. They are the questions which cannot be settled it is a matter, therefore, which must go through. The result must be something or nothing at all. The Confederacy must succeed, or it must full. They must push our armies off their soil, or we shall hold it.

And it is a fact significant to the rebels, and which they have not falled to take no-tice of—for it was predicted by one of their own organs in the very beginning of the war—that what territory we have taken we have held, and still hold. With the ex-ception of a little sand spit at Gelynnion, there is not another.

ception of a little sand spit at Gebruston, there is not another.

The question is, therefore, now as good as determined; and the rebels may as well give up now as at any future time. They would not have the boundaries we would give them, were we to give them any; and till they can start us off, and keep us off their soil, their chance of gatting others is hopsiess. They may as well give it up.

On the west of the town fringe of green pine boughs along the edge of the bank. The dreariness of a rainy evewith rifle pits. On the west of the town there is a huge, irregular swell of land, partially timbered on the north side, called White's Ridge. It extends between the railroad track and the Concord road, and terminates about a mile on the right of the Concord road, which runs parallel with, and near to the rives. Another incomplete for on the western end of this eminence was supplied with heavy artilicry, commanding the Concord road and the relivoral, and all intermediate points. Many citizens, obnoxious to the rebels, had packed up and left. Among the foremost of these were Parson Brownlow and Hon. Horace Maynard. The Provast Marshal's office was crowded with applicants for passes from morning the north and east was being closed; thus hemming in our whole force. That the next alght was one of great activity may be well tendence; but the dense fog of the morning revealed nothing to our etraining vision. The mist began to lift shout 10 o'clock (the 18th,) when heavy chirmishing took place on the Concord road, west of the fort, and shout two miles from the town, and the signal corps waved their mysterious flags from hill and house-tops. The old offending Adan now began to shew fastif among the rebel citizens in chucking, and spiteful remarks and prophesies of the speedy advent of their deliveres.

The skrimishing on the west had been ji-increasing for the two previous days, until on the arternoon of the feth it might almost be celled a battle. Three regiments had been ji-increasing for the two previous days, until on the arternoon of the feth, it might almost be celled a battle. A Public Hospital.
[Communicated.]
There is not, to-day, r an institution as a public hospital in Chimpon. Strange se it may appear, with the number of public institutions that have so recently speum gp in our comparatively new city, no hospital, such as every city needs and must have, has been organized. True, the city has erected a commoditions building, but has nevel opened if for the object intended. If a stranger is taken ill open the streets, or in our hotels, the only places entering sheller in the Mercy Hospital.
There is no form of lamman suffering in Paris for which there is not an institution to place the affected fr., and our city is old enough to have the represach removed, so a step in the right disartion. A building has been essected for a temporary hospital, until a suitable one can be built.
